Pattern multiplication

The far-field pattern of an array consisting of similar elements is the product of the pattern of a single element (the “element pattern”) and the pattern of an array of isotropic (point source) oscillator (the array factor).
Another example: rotate dipoles by 90 degrees: